Date:

10:00 am—12:00 noon

Wednesday February 18th 2009

Many communities, farmers and food entrepreneurs are looking to create “community kitchens” or “food business incubators” to benefit the local economy, community and farm viability or just to establish new businesses.

At this session you will find out what the best models are, where new facilities are being developed and what resources are needed to start and maintain a food business incubator.

Leslie Schaller, Business Counselor and founder of the Food Ventures Center at the Appalachian Center for Economic Networks— AceNet will present information on types of food incubator models, resources and client needs.

Leslie works with specialty food firms focusing on the start-up phase of network clients and provides consulting on food entrepreneurship throughout the United States.
